These murmurs are heard when the heart is normal and do not cause harm or increase risk of other health problems. This sound is heard just after the S1 heart sound. TurnoffAnimations. The decreased pressure allows more blood to flow abnormally through the ASD from the high pressured left atrium to the right atrium, ultimately resulting again in increased flow through the pulmonic valve – again, delaying its closure. They are usually heard in Pediatric Heart Sounds spot on the chest or above the clavicles and do not move radiate to other areas like the armpits, back, or higher in the neck. This make the M1 sound the main component of S1. Heart murmurs are sounds during your heartbeat cycle – such as whooshing or swishing – made by turbulent blood in or near your heart. A S4 Pediatric Heart Sounds sound can be an important sign of diastolic HF or active ischemia and is rarely a normal finding.
