Teachers participate in professional development and planning at that time. School districts need to come up with a new way of scheduling by creating a scheduling strategy, being intentional about putting students at the center, adapting as needs change, and building team capacity to be able to tackle master scheduling in a strategic way.

Thus, it is easier to deal with students with disabilities and differing learning styles. As a result, teachers have little time to plan or collaborate with peers. Pacing guides, which are used to map out when you will address each learning target or standard throughout the year or semester, are essential to make sure you use class time wisely. As the year winds down, some kids interest or need might wane, so there is always some other kid who wants to join us.
